READY-TO-WEAR GAS WAGON IS NEEDED BY READY-TO-WEAR CAMPBELL

COUGH AND A SNEEZE, THEN STOPPED MIDST LOVE AND DUTY

IT'S TWISTER TWISTED

Backed Into a Ditch and Was Hauled Therefrom by a Good Samaritan With a Team of Husky Mules.

Ready-to-Wear Campbell has purchased an automobile, and, believing firmly that it was far better to buy a used car on which to familiarize himself with the ins and outs of exploding gasoline, he purchased a car of a vintage long since forgotten in the onrush toward the modernized automobile, and Sunday was the day set for the try-out.

Mr. Campbell has been a student of automobiles for some time, looking forward to the day when he should guide his own car over the highways of the State. Saturday night he dreamed various dreams of automobiling, and bright and early both Mr. Campbell and his son sauntered forth to conquer the intricacies of a contrivance that didn't exactly come off Noah's ark, but, compared with present-day machines, was certainly not ready-to-wear.

Mr. Campbell desired to deliver a package at Cucamonga which involved the sum of $2.00, and before that package was delivered the cost of delivery mounted high—not in dollars, but in patience, energy, self-control and a few other things that go with an automobile which backs into a deep ditch and refuses to lift itself out of said ditch.

Arnold Bosch, of Cucamonga, finally came to the rescue with a little mule power, and the trouble was over. At least the trouble was over for a time, but every once in so often the machine seemed to contract sort of an asthmatic ailment and with a cough and a sneeze came to a stop.

Following each stop it was necessary for either Mr. Campbell or his son to alight and "twist" its tail once more, and in fact said tail was twisted until there seemed to be plenty of chance for the twisting, but the twister was short of twisting ability, and then, too, the animal sort of threw the Senior Campbell to the ground and placed a foot on him, so to speak, with the result that Monday morning both Campbells were resting from a day of rest, full of automobiling experience.

For many moons Mr. Campbell has been talking "Ready-to-Wear" clothes, and before another week he's going to be talking ready-to-run automobiles with more motor power and less brute strength.

Now don't laugh—this is really a serious matter—to Campbell.

BOY REPOSES AS SEARCH IS MADE

From one person to another through the throngs of people at Camp Baldy Sunday afternoon there passed the excited word that five-year-old Wilbur Patterson had wandered away from the Sanborn cottage and had probably been dashed to pieces over the rocks of one of the many jagged cliffs or was wandering about through the dense underbrush, an easy prey for rattlers or wild beasts. The parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Patterson of San Bernardino, were frantic with fear.

In a remarkably short space of time a party of 300 resorters had been organized and a systematic search of the mountains and canyons was started. Parties of fifty were sent out in many directions. As darkness settled down over the camp the anxiety of the searchers became still greater. "Have they found him yet?" was the password at every turn. It had been arranged that if the boy was found there was to be a signal. The hours passed, and still no sign came, and it was feared the worst had befallen the little fellow. Then the camp was aroused by a glad shout from the boy's father. Quickly the word passed that the boy had been found. It was then well along in the night and there was a rush of the searchers for the Sanborn cottage to learn the particulars of the finding and whether or not the child had been injured.

If anyone had expected to hear an exciting tale of adventure he was mistaken. While the search was in progress a friend chanced to go into the bedroom of the Sanborn cottage, and there, curled snugly upon the

16.7 MILES COUNTY ROADS COMPLETE

HIGHWAY COMMISSION REPORTS TO SUPERVISORS

One-Half Mile of Road Is Being Built Each Day, the Grade of Cajon Pass Road Being Reduced Greatly.

Figures issued by the County Highway Commission Tuesday show that there are now 16.7 miles of improved highways open to public traffic and that the roads are being finished at the rate of one-half mile each day. These figures refer exclusively to the paved highways. In addition to these the Cajon crew has completed the grading work through the pass and there are now eight miles of roadway open to traffic that will be paved later.

The heavy road has been cut out of the hillside, where it will not be damaged by the heavy winter storms which have caused so much trouble in years gone by in keeping the road open to travel. A number of big fills and cuts have been made.

An easy grade has been made through the pass and when the road is completed to Victorville all points north of the mountains will be accessible without trouble to travel by highway.

The following sections of paved highway are now open to traffic: San Bernardino to Colton (via U. R. 1), 1.7 miles.

Colton avenue, between Redlands and San Bernardino, 5 miles.

Crafton avenue, from Citrus avenue west toward the Mill Creek road, 1.5 miles.

Base Line, from Waterman avenue to Hesperia Springs, three miles.

Central avenue, from Chino to the State highway, 2.5 miles.

Euclid avenue, from Ontario south, 2 miles.

Archibald avenue, 1 mile.

The County Highway Commission now has eleven crews at work under the commission's payroll, and there is one contracting company working a crew on Archibald avenue near Cucamonga.

Nearly 3000 feet of highway is being completed each day and Engineer Shirley Bright considers that this record is exceptionally good in view of what is being accomplished in road work in other counties.

IOWANS WILL PICNIC

All former residents of the State of Iowa are hereby informed of the annual summer reunion and picnic of the Iowa Association of Southern California. It will be held in beautiful Bixby Park, Long Beach, all day Saturday, August 14, 1915.

The county registers will be in place, coffee free to all who buy a badge, and a jolly social reunion all day for everybody.

Special cars direct to the Park will leave often from the rear of the P. E. Depot, Sixth and Main streets, Los Angeles. Transfers will be given to the park to all who go on regular cars. Prizes will be given to:

The oldest man present, native of Iowa.

The oldest woman present, native of Iowa.

The oldest married couple, both natives.

The oldest man and woman, not natives, but who lived in Iowa at least ten years.

The homeliest man, native Iowa, who presents himself as a candidate.

The Iowa Association of Long Beach is helping in all plans, and will join heartily in making it a great success. There will be a brief program about 2 o'clock. Judge Curtis D. Wilbur, our popular president, will preside. The invitation is for every Hawkeye to go and enjoy the reunion with old friends.

Further information may be obtained of the Secretary, C. H. Parsons, whose office is in the California Savings Bank, corner Fourth and Spring streets, Los Angeles.

LITTLE BEAR OPEN

On August 1 Little Bear lake will be open to the public, under the following conditions: One and a half miles of the south shore of the lake will be free to anglers; a small charge will be made for parking autos on the lake shore within the fence; free parking will be permitted outside the fence.

A fleet of boats has been ordered and will be placed in commission at once.

Camping will be permitted only on the outside of the fence—about one-quarter mile from the shore of the lake.

Bait and fishing tackle may be obtained on the premises from the concessionaries. Recent trials have developed the fact that there are abundant fish biting freely.

bed, lay Wilbur, all unconscious of the fuss he had created. Tired out after a day of fun, he had crawled upon the bed without mentioning his intentions to his parents, and all their calls had failed to arouse him. The searchers had never once thought of looking into the cottage.

MISSING HIS NEWS AND COULDN'T EAT

NON-SUBSCRIBERS WORRY NEIGHBORS. NO USE IN IT

Stopped His Paper, but Found It a Household Necessity, so He Had to Borrow One From His Neighbor.

Last Thursday evening a man was seen rushing through the village streets toward the post office with a decided rush, and a friend inquired of him what the hurry was all about.

"Well, I'll tell you," said he. "I reached home, sat down to dinner, when it occurred to me that I neglected to get the Upland News, and I simply couldn't enjoy that dinner until I came down and procured the paper."

A man telephoned in the other day and asked The News management to see to it that one of his neighbors subscribed for The Upland News immediately, as this neighbor was constantly borrowing his paper and had become so brazen about it that he even wanted to read the paper before the owner had a chance to look it over.

A man recently stopped his paper because of something appearing therein not to his liking, but before a week had passed that same man was hustling down to his neighbor's home to borrow one.

There is really no use in bothering your neighbor. The Upland News costs but a small amount a year, and you can just as well have your own copy each and every week in the year.

BY MOONLIGHT TO MT. BALDY'S PEAK

Climbing by moonlight, a crowd of seventeen made the trip from the Presbyterian Sunday School camp to the top of "Old Baldy" Tuesday morning. The trip was made by the San Antonio Canyon trail, which includes the long, rocky stretch over the "Devil's Backbone."

The party left the Presbyterian camp shortly after 11, and took the trip in easy stages, getting well toward the top before sunrise. An extra mile was added through the following of an old mine trail for quite a distance.

Most of the party returned to camp by the same trail, but a few took the Bear Canyon trail back to Camp Baldy.

While the crowd was at the Presbyterian camp further work of development was done. The springs have been led into one channel, and make quite a large stream. A storage house is almost completed. It is hoped that before August has passed a log cabin of generous size will be built under two of the great cedars on the flat above the creek.

The crowd who made the climb Tuesday morning included the Misses Bradley, Mitchell, Dickerman, Denner, Mitchell, Schultz, Greenleaf, Lackey, Mrs. Chaffee and E. Cline, Gilbert Cline, Geo. Hay, R. C. Stone, L. R. Bradley, H. C. Kennedy, O. V. Rice, E. K. Browne and E. W. Fischer, Mr. Thompson.

WANT CERTIFICATE OF CITIZENSHIP

Notification was served upon the County Highway Commission Tuesday afternoon by County Treasurer Williams that from this time henceforth he cannot cash any county warrants for highway employees unless a certificate of citizenship accompanies each warrant, or a certificate that the employee is a citizen of the United States is kept on file in the office of the county auditor.

County Treasurer Williams states that his sureties have made this demand upon him.

"It will not be difficult for the Highway Commission to comply with the county treasurer's demand," stated Royal H. Mack, secretary of the Highway Commission, "because the commission has made it a point not to employ any person not a citizen of the United States."

"I will prepare certificates at once and have the various employees sign them and have them placed on file in the county auditor's office. This order of the county treasurer's will cause no delay in the cashing of warrants—it will only mean that we must have each employee sign the certificate of citizenship and get them on file before the next pay day."

TO MUCH PERSONAL INFLUENCE ENTERS IN PURCHASE OF CO. HOSPITAL SITE

MORE OBJECTIONS REGISTERED BY TAXPAYERS TO LAND PURCHASE

18000 TAXPAYERS SIGN

Too Much Land Bought for Hospital Site. Election Proclamation Called for Site, Not a Farm.

Hinting at sensational revelations in regard to sums of money that have been and will be paid to unnamed individuals for use of their personal influence with members of the Board of Supervisors, suit to annul the purchase of the Anderson tract for the new county hospital has been filed.

It is said that certain parties, names not yet being revealed, privately, secretly and otherwise used influence with the Supervisors, and for doing so received certain sums of money with the consent of the owners of the tract.

What Complaint Alleges

The complaint, which was filed late last Thursday afternoon by Attorney Cecil Phillips on behalf of A. E. Nickerson, a resident and taxpayer of San Bernardino, declares that it would be useless and futile and an idle act to have the district attorney prosecute the action; that the call for the $150,000 bond election was to get money necessary for a county hospital grounds, buildings and to equip the buildings; that the supervisors then issued the bonds as provided in the election call, and then the complaint makes these allegations:

That on April 6, 1915, the county received $158,159.83 from sale of bonds, and same was ordered placed in "hospital improvement fund."

That on June 2, 1915, the supervisors voted to purchase the Anderson tract at $645 an acre.

That the resolution calling for the purchase of the Anderson tract, "said to contain ninety-three and one-half acres more or less," was defective.

That it is not stated in the resolution that said tract of land does contain ninety-three and one-half acres, or ninety-three and one-half acres more or less.

That the price of said Anderson tract cannot be ascertained from published notice of intention.

Too Much Land

That said Anderson tract does not contain ninety-three and one-half acres.

That the site purchased is at least sixty acres in excess of land needed for county hospital grounds.

That the sum of $55,947.50, which will be the money left when the whole purchase price of tract—$69,267.50—is paid, is wholly inadequate to carry out the purposes set forth in the election call.

That there is a deficit in the county funds in excess of $100,000 and taxes are becoming too burdensome to divert more funds to the hospital improvement fund.

That the supervisors, on or before July 1, transferred $30,000 to the road fund from the general fund in order not to show an actual deficit in the road fund.

County Money Paid Out

The complaint then goes on to state that County Auditor Berger and County Treasurer Williams paid over $46,968.90 of the total of $69,267.50 said to be the price of the site, and that the sum of $13,338.60 will be paid to the Anderson heirs when title satisfactory to the district attorney is made.

The complaint also claims that E. A. Parkford, John Doe and Richard Roe have received a large part of the money paid by the county for the land.

The complaint also alleges that Parkford, Roe and Doe have an agreement with other defendants whereby they are to receive an amount in excess of ten per cent of the total price of land from defendants for using personal influence with members of the board, privately, secretly and otherwise to consummate purchase of Anderson tract.

That the sum of $645 an acre is grossly in excess of the true value of the land.

HOSPITAL PLANS SHOWN CO. BOARD

COUNTY ARCHITECT FARWELL PRESENTS PLANS

New Hospital to Be One of the Most Modern in Southern California. Dr. Callnon Makes Suggestions.

Members of the Board of Supervisors were shown the detailed plans for the proposed county hospital for the first time Tuesday afternoon by Lyman Farwell of Los Angeles, who was selected by the board as architect for the proposed group of buildings. Farwell appeared before the board at 2:30 o'clock.

"The scope of the plans and the extent and character of the buildings depends entirely upon how much money there is to be expended for this purpose," said Mr. Farwell yesterday afternoon. "Naturally I cannot fix upon any definite figures for construction until I know how much money there will be available for the buildings."

"My plans contemplate a group of buildings when the hospital is finally completed, but how much of the group can be built, or how large the buildings to be erected now will be, I cannot state positively."

Farwell spent several hours Tuesday morning with Dr. Callnon, superintendent of the county hospital, going over the plans.

"I have incorporated every modern idea into the plans for the new hospital," concluded Farwell.

JAILORS WORKING TOO MANY HOURS

Calling attention to the fact that the State law prescribes eight hours as a day's labor for all employees of the State or any political subdivision of it, the Central Labor Council has addressed a communication to the Board of Supervisors pointing out that jailers in the county jail are on a twelve-hour shift, and asking that the law be complied with.

The following communication was filed with the clerk of the board Monday:

"San Bernardino, July 21.

"Honorable Board of Supervisors: "Dear Sirs:—The San Bernardino Central Labor Council, an organization composed of representatives of the various labor organizations of this county, would respectfully have your honorable body become aware of the fact of which the San Bernardino Labor Council has been notified, and of which you no doubt are not aware, that there are at present two jailers employed in the San Bernardino county jail who are required to perform their duties for a period of more than eight hours a day."

"We, the Central Labor Council, respectfully request that the Supervisors of the County of San Bernardino reduce the hours of these men to eight, as required by State law."

"Respectfully, C. F. SEITZ, "Secy. S. B. Central Labor Council. "G. M. Flory, President."

"THE CLANSMAN" TO BE SHOWN HERE

GRIFFITH'S MASTERPIECE TO BE AT COLONIAL

12 Reels Taking Three Hours Is Big Attraction Here for Sunday and Monday, August 8th and 9th.

"The Clansman," which comes to the Colonial Sunday and Monday, August 8 and 9, is the greatest motion picture ever produced. Adapted from the novel of Thos. Dixon, Jr., and directed by D. W. Griffith, the world's foremost motion picture producer, it presents the very acme of art and realism in motion pictures. Twelve reels are required to show this wonderful production.

"The Clansman" deals with the Civil War period. It shows the causes that led up to this conflict and carries the spectator through the war. It treats impartially the causes for which each side was struggling and depicts the political conditions in both the North and the South during this struggle.

In the "Clansman" are shown the most spectacular battle scenes ever staged. Field telephones, couriers, flag signals, signals by mirrors, and even a captive balloon, were all utilized in staging "The Clansman."

No general on the European battlefield has made better use of the modern appliances of war than did Mr. D. W. Griffith, the leading figure in the motion picture world, in staging the battle scenes for "The Clansman."

These are not used in the picture as part of the army equipment, but were simply utilized by Mr. Griffith in staging the scenes. He used 1915 methods to better execute the methods of 1861.

65. The battlefields stretched for a length of two miles. At one end of the field a tower 100 feet in height was erected. Mr. Griffith directed the movements of the army from this place of vantage. At the rear of both armies telephone wires were strung. The opposing forces represented the Northern and Southern troops during the Civil War.

At a distance of every 50 yards a telephone operator was stationed with a receiver strapped to her ear. The telephone wires were connected with the tower. At Mr. Griffith's elbow was an ex-army officer. When the director desired a certain part of the infantry to advance or fall back, the cavalry to charge, or the artillery to shell a certain position, he gave his order to the officer at his side. The officer transmitted it by telephone to the operator located at the point where Mr. Griffith desired the movement to take place. The operator then gave the command to the officer in charge of the troops at that point, with the result that the military maneuvers were executed with only an instant's delay after leaving the mouth of Mr. Griffith. In staging the battle scenes Mr. Griffith had three West Point army officers, a regiment of the National Guard and a dozen or more G. A. R. veterans to assist him.

The history of the South during the reconstruction period, immediately following the war, showing the organization of the famous Ku Klux Klan and its motives, presents one of the most interesting periods in the history of the United States. This is realistically shown in "The Clansman." Three thousand of those famous whitehooded riders are shown in their raids on the negroes.

The cost of producing "The Clansman" was $50,000, and seven months were required in staging it. Twenty-five thousand soldiers are shown in action. Hand-to-hand infantry conflicts, cavalry charges and artillery duels are graphically depicted. Artillery duels in which explosive shells are used for the first time in motion pictures are shown. These shells are hurled from the same huge mortars that were used by the Federal army during the Civil War. These cannons were borrowed from the U. S. Govt for the occasion.

A well known college professor worked six months digging up historical data for "The Clansman."

Historically and technically it is perfect.

The assassination of President Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth is one of the principal features of this attraction. R. A. Walsh, who plays the part of Booth, was compelled to rehearse the assassination scene 26 times before it was done to the satisfaction of Mr. Griffith. Walsh made the jump from the President's box in the theater to the stage below, a distance of 12 feet, alighting on his hands and knees, each time that he rehearsed the scene.

The same musical program that was such a great feature of "The Clansman" is to be presented at the Colonial by an orchestra of ten pieces, comprising some of the best local talent, augmented by well known musicians from other Southern California cities.

MANY THIRST IN DRY WEST-END SINCE A RAID ON BLIND PIGS SUNDAY MORNING

EVER AND ANON CITY AND ENVIRONS GO DRY. WET ONES GET THEIR

'T WAS ALL ON A SUNDAY

One Hundred Either in Days or Dollars Is Assessed of Those Pleading Guilty. Trials Are Set for the Others.

And 't was all on a Sunday morning.

Upland is going dry, then wet—wet, then dry, according to the goings and comings of blind piggers, and last Sunday saw the west end go dry once more, but for how long nobody knows.

Upland, Ontario, Cucamonga and county officers rounded up some fourteen offenders last Sunday morning, and the strange part of it was the officers found it necessary to wait until some of them returned from church before they could be placed under arrest.

In Upland Robert Seichert, who resides on Third avenue between C street and Tenth, in the heart of the residence section, was dispensing booze, and Saturday being a decidedly warm day, business was especially good, for the empties brought in by the officers following the raid was evidence to the effect.

Robert Seichert's brother, August Seichert, who resides just outside the city limits to the east, was also gathered in.

Those arrested in Ontario were Henry L. Trank, 403 East Park street; Joe Montes, 515 East Park street, and Pete Rivas, 410 East State street.

Those arrested in Cucamonga township included Ben Okada, Mrs. Carmen Romero, Eugene Helms, Alexander Stewart, Y. Oriyaya, Mrs. Caroline Yorba, Mrs. Eliza Ramirez, and N. Romero. Of these, all but the last two are to appear before Judge J. R. Pollock. Helms and Mrs. Yorba are out on bail and Mrs. Romero is at liberty upon her promise to appear when wanted. Mrs. Ramirez has demanded a jury trial, having plead not guilty, and her hearing has been fixed for August 3 before Judge Crane.

Seichert brothers appeared before Judge Crane on Tuesday and changed their plea from not guilty to guilty, and were given a fine of 100 days in the county jail or $100. They paid the dollars. N. Romero pleaded guilty and was charged and was given the same sentence, and having more time than money decided on becoming a guest of Sheriff McMinin for ninety and ten days.

OPEN AIR CONCERT HELD AT ETIWANDA

The annual open air concert at Etiwanda was held on the church grounds on Wednesday. It was, if possible, more delightfully planned than the preceding ones. The setting was beautiful and informal and presented the appearance of a garden party. Guests were grouped at small tables under soft lights of the Japanese lanterns. Ice was served throughout the evening.

The program presented was largely outside talent, the Etiwanda musicians being chiefly heard in the choruses, which were excellent. The men's chorus gave "Bendemeere Stream," and responded with "I Want to Go Down South Once More."

The program was as follows:

- Piano Solo.....Harold Schwad
Solo.....Mr. Henderson
Whistling Solo.....Mr. Cherkak
Selection.....Men's Chorus
Reading—"Six Mirandy on Other People's Children".....Mrs. Rader
Solo.....Mr. Buckham
Violin Solo.....Howard Perdew
Solo.....Mr. Henderson
"Bendemeere Stream".....Men's Chorus
Piano Duet.....Mr. and Mrs. Schwad
Solo—"Two Old Love Songs".....

Miss Louthin
Mr. Henderson sang "Evening Star" from "Tannhauser" and Tol-stoy's "Good-bye."

The girl's chorus sang "Summer Time."

Mrs. Spencer Johnson of Hanford was a guest here of Geo. H. Johnson and family and attended the concert.

Mrs. Bartee and Mrs. Johnson are guests at the Utman.

Will Merson and Earl Henderson came in from Imperial Wednesday and attended the concert.

THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1915

THE town of Chino, to the south of Upland, is in a sad state known as "jitneyized to death," according to the Chino Herald. A man of figures has shown that if each jitney bus leaving Chino during the twenty-four hours of each day were filled to capacity, half of the entire population of the city would be out of town all the time, or in other words, would be either going or coming.

BLIND PIGS seem to be springing up here and there, ever and anon, especially during this heated season of the year, and this week thirteen offenders were rounded up and brought to the bar of justice. The city of Upland has but one case, all others being outside the city limits—some in Cucamonga and some in Ontario—but the question arises since Upland's oasis was found in the residential section, as to what local officers are up against. The people of Upland do not want blind pigs, as is evidenced by their vote, and offenders are most likely to profit by the experience of several men and women during the past few weeks, for the fine on first offense prevails around the one hundred mark either in days or dollars. Local officers are after offenders with a vengeance, so those inclined toward dealing in the cup that cheers had better incline their inclinations toward better things.

IHAD a count made not long ago in the Library of Congress," says Elihu Root, "of the number of laws that had been passed in five years ending December 1, 1913. I found that more than 62,000 laws had been passed by Congress and the state legislatures in this country in that five years, and I found that there had been reported during that five years, and published in 630 volumes of reports of the courts, more than 65,000 decisions of courts of last resort in this country. Now, not even Mr. Choate knows them by heart. How can you conduct your business and keep out of jail?"

How can any man, whether in business or not, keep out of jail, with those 62,000 laws and 65,000 court decisions on his trail, reinforced by the hundreds of thousands of laws and decisions of other years? Perhaps the reason is the very fact hinted at by Mr. Root—that no human being can possibly keep track of them.

Anybody would think that the legal profession, in sheer despair at trying to keep up with legislation and court decisions, would try to curb the output, limiting the scope of legislation to essential things, and reforming our semi-legislative judicial system.

IN THE August Woman's Home Companion appears a highly practical and exceedingly interesting article by Alice Farham Leader, a New York physician, entitled "Health and Good Looks." The author gives rules for the girl who wants to look her best. She says that health depends upon food, sleep and fresh air, and not upon pills and prescriptions, and part of what she has to say is reproduced as follows:

"Right eating does not mean giving up the foods you like; it means balancing your menu to get the full value of all foods. The general mixed diet of wholesome food will, as a rule, give more nourishment and strength than overeating of one kind of food. If you find some meat disagreeing with you, by all means give it up, but don't straightway conclude that you must become a vegetarian in order to remain well.

"Strike a midway course—if you like meats eat it, but in moderation, as a rule only once daily. Fried meat is always indigestible, so avoid it and confine yourself to that which has been roasted, broiled or stewed.

"Vegetables are worth their weight in doctor's fees. Eat plentiful of them, except when they are cooked by frying. This method of cooking not only robs the food of its health value, but surrounds it with clogging grease."

ADENVER editor has been fined $250 for contempt of court. His offense was that he refused to reveal the source of information that had led to exposure of legislative corruption. It is very easy to be in contempt of a Denver court.

It is customary for a lawyer to regard information as "privileged." Such information he may not be forced to divulge, and he needs betray no confidence in relation to it. He may keep his mouth shut, and retain good standing. Often a client accused of serious crime makes a full confession of guilt to the lawyer defending him. This does not change the attitude of the lawyer. He still strives to establish the innocence of his client, and will, with tears in his eyes and a fine tremolo in his voice, plead to the jury for a verdict he knows to be not in accord with justice. There is a fiction that a lawyer is an officer of the court. This procures him certain immunities, but it is a very hollow fiction. The aim of the lawyer is as likely to be to bamboozle the court as to help it carry out the purpose of the law. This is not a reflection upon the practitioner, but merely reveals the ethics governing his conduct.

The proposition may be submitted, confidently, that the editor is at least as useful a citizen as the lawyer. He appears, mostly without fee, in the interest of the whole community. If he learns a fact, the publication of which would be of public service, he publishes it. Why is not the knowledge of that fact as much his property as similar knowledge would be the property of a lawyer? Yet he does not employ it for a sinister object, and the lawyer sometimes does. And why should a judge seek to force the editor to betray confidence? This Colorado editor had accomplished a distinct good by his course. He had employed righteously his information, and perhaps had received the information only on pledge of secrecy. The courts, generally, are respected. The courts of Colorado, it must be admitted with regret, generally are not. But no judge is superhuman, and the one to hedge the bench about with artificial majesty, presuming to assume the functions of the editorial conscience, is not winning regard for himself or the tribunal over which he presides, capably perhaps.—Pasadena News.

CAUSE OF FRUIT SPOTTING IS FOUND

A discovery that should save many thousands of dollars annually to the lemon and orange shippers of this State has been made by Prof. H. S. Fawcett of the Pathological Laboratory at Whittier. To him was assigned the task of finding out the cause and, if possible, means of preventing the characteristic spotting of lemons and oranges in transit. The difficulty has been particularly marked in lemons from the coast sections, and to a less degree in lemons from points farther inland. Lemons show the characteristic spotting more than oranges. Further, the early months of this spring and summer showed difficulty far worse than usual.

Prof. Fawcett has demonstrated by a large number of experiments that the difficulty comes from the fruit itself, not from a fungus or bacteria. Oddly enough, the cause of the spotting is the oil of the fruit rinds. Exuded oil from a bruised or damp rind, on coming in contact with a perfectly good rind, causes the primary injury which later develops into what is called a "green spot," although it may turn reddish or brown on fruit that has been held a rather long time.

It will thus be seen that even one bruised lemon or orange, by spreading its exuded oil upon adjacent rinds may easily start a spotting that will extend throughout a box.

Prof. Fawcett says that more than a year ago J. D. Culbertson discovered that the typical green spots could be produced by pressing or rolling lemon fruits against a board so as to cause injuries. This fact was the basis of later investigations. Further inquiries showed that lemon washer gangs had observed that when the odor of lemon oil was especially strong at the washer, these lemons were apt to develop spotting. Working on the hypothesis that the rind oil might cause the difficulties, Prof. Fawcett began a series of tests, experiments and checks that show conclusively that it is the oil which does the damage.

The demonstration opens up a whole field of possibilities. It appears that fruit picked up in the early morning is more rugged and its oil cells are more easily ruptured, with greater consequent "spotting" of the fruit. Wet weather pickings are noted to be similarly spotted more than the fruit picked during dry times. This fact would account for the greater amount of damaged fruit picked during the unusually wet weeks of early spring this year. There is, according to Prof. Fawcett, undoubtedly a wide variation in the fruit at various stages of its growth, as well as a marked variation in fruits from different groves.

Summing up the commercial side of this discovery, Prof. Fawcett says the knowledge of the possibilities of this injury gives an added reason for extreme care in handling fruit, especially at times when the oil is most easily liberated or during cool, moist weather, when it is most apt to cause spotting. The fact that spotting is most apt to occur on fruit picked after a rain or when covered with dew makes it advisable that picking be discontinued, if possible, at those times.

STARVE THE FLY—DON'T SWAT HIM

This paper believes that the greatest menace to health in this locality is the fly, the fly in limitless plural. Flies are a horrible nuisance in California. They have come to be such a nuisance because the people have not yet awakened to the danger. The deadly, nasty fly robs us of much of our comfort in the beautiful summer climate of this valley, besides endangering everyone's health. But, instead of swatting, as has been the slogan of late years, let's starve the fly. Starve him, instead of allowing him to grow to the swatting age, says Dr. John B. Huber, an eastern physiologist and writer. Listen to this:

A photograph shown in health department exhibits has been taken for representations both of the crusts on the moon's surface and of the Martian canals. What it really depicts is a circular plate containing a gelatin culture medium, nutrient for the germs. This plate before the experiment a tabula rasa, an absolute blank; and so, to the unaided eyesight, it remained for the first twenty-four hours. After which there developed on it writing as ominous as has ever appeared to human vision. The biologist had put on that clean surface a fly that had got its feet entangled in a consumptive's sputum; and the experimenter had then covered the whole with a bell jar, so that the fly could not get away. The insect thus confined promenade on the plate; whereupon colonies of tubercle bacilli, nurtured and propagated on that congenial soil—colonies now made up of countless millions of those emissaries of the Captain of the Men of Death—developed in those fly tracks.

Such is the process by which flies disseminate the germs of tuberculosis. In such manner do they swell the infant death rate by contaminating milk with those germs. Thus is the typhoid fly transferring the germs of that infection to food and drink. And the fly is proved to have transmitted also the germs of cholera, tetanus, eye contagions, anthrax, glanders, infantile paralysis (by the biting stable fly), scarlet fever, diphtheria, meningitis, leprosy, bubonic plague, carbuncle, infectious wounds, erysipelas and other diseases; also eggs of parasitic worms.

For several years past there has been swat-the-fly campaigns—a billion or so the season destroyed by swatting, the trap, drowning, sulphur fumes, electrocution even. All this seems impressive enough until one considers the number of flies that have escaped the slaughter—until one reflects that one overwintering mother fly might—mathematically speaking—have, come the end of fly time, a progeny numbering into the octillions.

Obviously, then, for "swat-the-fly" the slogan "starve the fly" should be substituted.

The way to destroy this insect is to remove its pabulum. Where there is no filth there will be no flies. And far better than swatting flies were it to clean up the places where they would breed; especially manure heaps, out of which 95 per cent of flies first see the light. All the details of fly prevention are set forth in pamphlets provided without price by the health department of one's state or municipality, or by city leagues and like organizations. The Bureau of Entomology of the Department of Agriculture at Washington and the Fly Fighting Committee of the American Civic Association, 156 Fifth avenue, New York, are ready to supply such important information.

MIDSUMMER

Around this lovely valley rise
The purple hills of paradise.
O softly on yon banks of haze
Her rosy face the summer lays!
Beamed along the azure sky
The argosies of cloudland lie,
Whose shores, with many a shining
Rift,
Far off their pearl-white peaks uplift.

Through all the long midsummer day
The meadowsides are sweet with hay.
I seek the coolest sheltered seat,
Where where the field and forest meet.
Where grow the pine trees, tall and bland;
The ancient oaks, austere and grand,
And fringing roots and pebbles fret
The ripples of the rivulet.

I watch the mowers as they go Through the tall grass, a white-sleeved row.
With even strokes their scythes they swing,
In tune their merry whetstones ring.
Behind, the nimble youngsters run,
And toss the thick swaths in the sun.
The cattle graze, while, warm and still,
Slopes the broad pasture, basks the hill.
And bright, where summer breezes break,
The green wheat crackles like a lake.

The butterfly and humbebee
Come to the pleasant woods with me;
Quickly before me runs the quail,
Her chickens skulk behind the rail;
High up the lone wood pigeon sits,
And the woodpecker pecks and flits;
Sweet woodland music sinks and swells,
The brooklet rings its tinkling bells,
The swarming insects drone and hum,
The partridge beats its throbbing
drum,
The squirrel leaps among the boughs,
And chatters in his leafy house;
The oriole flashes by; and, look!
Into the mirror of the brook,
Where the vain bluebird trims his coat,
Two tiny feathers fall and float.

As silently, as tenderly,
The down of peace descends on me.
—J. T. Trowbridge.

THE CONQUERED

We who so eager started on life's race,
And breathless ran, nor stinted
any whit
For aching muscles, or the parching grit
Of dust upon the lips; who set the face
Only more desperately toward the place
Where the goal's altar smoked, if runners knit
With stronger limbs outran us; we who sit
Beaten at last; for us what gift or grace?

Though we have been outstripped, yet known have we
The joy of contest; we have felt hot life
Throb in our veins, a tingling ecstasy—
The prize is not the wreath with envy rife,
But to have been all that our souls might be.
Our guerdon is the passion of that strife!

$1,635,000 Hidden

In This Year's Goodyear Tires

Here are amazing facts: Goodyear Fortified Tires contain five costly features found in no other tire. They have other features not common.

If we omitted those features, this year's probable output would cost us $1,635,000 less. We could add that much to our profits. And you would never know it until troubles came.

This year's improvements alone will cost us $500,000 yearly. Most of this goes into extra rubber—all into extra treadwear. And we shall spend on research $100,000 this year to find other betterments still.

No-Rim-Cut Tires—"On-Air" Cured With All-Weather Treads or Smooth

Users Save $5,000,000

Yet our 1915 price reduction—made February 1st—will save Goodyear users about $5,000,000 this year. And that was our third reduction in two years, totaling 45 per cent.

These extra features—used by us alone—will save users millions more.

That's why Goodyears dominate. They have long outlasted any other. They are gaining new users faster than we can supply them. We hope, for your own sake, that they'll soon win you. Any dealer will supply you.

SUIT FILED AGAINST SUPERVISORS

That title to property is not satisfactory to district attorney, and that it is possible county may not acquire clear title at all.

Those Named in Complaint
Those named in the complaint are the following: The County of San Bernardino, a public corporation; the Board of Supervisors of San Bernardino County, S. V. Horton, W. J. Kincaid, R. L. Riley, M. W. H. Williams, S. G. Berger, Frank Holmes, Sarah Jane Holmes, H. H. Fitting, Alice M. Fitting, Frank Parmenter, Annie R. Parmenter, C. J. Anderson, Margaret M. Anderson, Elviro Anderson, Francis Marion Andrews, William Wesley Anderson, Ingersoll Anderson, Elizabeth Brown, Marietta Survis, Richard Roe, John Doe, E. A. Parkford and C. J. Anderson as administrator for the estate of Reuben J. Anderson, deceased.

The complaint asks that the defendants be restrained from disposing of the money paid them in any way; that the supervisors—Horton, Kincaid, Riley and Glover present, copies of the complaint filed in the suit of A. E. Nickerson and 18,000 other taxpayers of San Bernardino County against the County, Supervisors and other defendants to compel the return of the money paid for the Anderson tract hospital site, were served upon the board.

HOSPITAL SITE SUIT SERVED ON BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

When the Board of Supervisors met in regular session Monday morning, with Supervisors Horton, Kincaid, Riley and Glover present, copies of the complaint filed in the suit of A. E. Nickerson and 18,000 other taxpayers of San Bernardino County against the County, Supervisors and other defendants to compel the return of the money paid for the Anderson tract hospital site, were served upon the board.

Notification was also served that the depositions of the supervisors would be taken by Miss M. A. Kerr, in the offices of Cecil Phillips, attorney for the plaintiff, in the old post office block next Saturday morning.

The serving of the papers by W. H. Baldwin upon the supervisors came while the board was in the midst of routine matters, and for a moment caused a slight stir in the room, although none of the members of the board made any comment, it being apparent that the purpose was to pass the matter off lightly.

The complaint asks that the defendants—the owners of the different parcels of property in the Anderson tract; E. A. Parkford of Ontario, whom the complaint recites received a large sum of money for using his personal influence to cause the Board of Supervisors to purchase the land, and County Treasurer Williams and County Auditor Berger, be compelled to return $46,968.90 to the hospital improvement fund, which the complaint alleges was illegally disbursed because the supervisors did not comply with the election call which provided for the purchase of a hospital site and not a county poor farm.

Average mileage is the real test

Spectacular cases of big mileage furnish little evidence of tire quality. It's the average of thousands of tires run under all sorts of conditions of every-day use that really counts. And that's where Savage Tires show up strong.

Because of the highest grade of raw materials and the great care used in manufacture, Savage Tires are uniformly better and average much greater mileage. Casing after casing runs over 10,000 miles, many over 14,000.

Burglars?—Many of Them—

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Mehl were enjoying the evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Cable Tuesday, when some one notified Mr. Mehl that they had seen a man enter his home just across the street, and thought it was a burglar endeavoring to carry off some of the Mehl valuables. Mr. Mehl gathered himself together with a mighty effort and went forth to capture said burglar. Approaching the house, he noticed a light in the bathroom, and knowing he had turned out all the lights before leaving, he prepared to grapple with most anything. Approaching the front door, he applied his key and entered. Somebody turned on the lights, and there, all about him, were twenty of his friends, who informed him that in the course of events he had reached another milestone.

Those to spend the evening with Mr. Mehl were Messrs. Welles Ross, Harold Taylor, J. P. Mehl, E. C. Mehl, P. O. Long, Geo. Cable, Chas. Deverts, Tracy Morris, Thomas Smith, Ned Granger, Dr. Swain, Chas. Fuller, Dr. Kankel, Clifford Lamb, F. W. Clark, M. McInnes, J. F. Sawyer, C. E. Grier, Will Cline, G. A. Brest, H. O. Blohm, Bruce Bowers, Howard Roberts, L. N. Kirk and A. C. Crist.

Following the good time of the evening, Mr. Mehl was presented a beautiful leather chair, and in the years to come whenever he enjoys that chair he will remember the night he captured the burglar.

House Party—

Mayor and Mrs. Woodbridge entertained a large number of friends Saturday, Sunday and Monday at their home on Twenty-second street. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Woodbridge and two children of Los Angeles, J. R. Woodbridge, Los Angeles; Mrs. Doolittle of Aspen, Col., and Mr. Frank Drake of Boston, who is a mining engineer.

Miss Kuehny Honored—

Miss Hulda Kuehny was the honored guest Wednesday evening of last week when Miss Linda Schmidt invited a large number of Miss Kuehny's friends to the Schmidt home on Tenth street. Miss Kuehny received many beautiful gifts presented by the guests, and after the evening's fun refreshments were served by Miss Schmidt. Guests present were Mrs. Paul Schowalter, Mrs. W. E. Goetz, Miss Edna Eymann, Miss Onnie Eymann, Miss Gertrude Eymann, Mrs. C. C. Eymann, Miss Edna Schowalter, Miss Elsie Haury, Miss Susie Haury, Miss Helen Rose, Miss Kate Rose, Miss Selma Weber, Miss Gussie Weber, Mrs. A. P. Weber, Mrs. A. L. Weber, Miss Aleda Dahlem, Miss Eline Detweiler, Mrs. Daniel Detweiler, Mrs. Will Detweiler, Miss Clara Schmidt of Wichita, Kan., Miss Esther Krebhel, Miss Hulda Isaac, Miss Anna Epp and Miss Louise Epp of Newton, Kan., Miss Olga Wiens of Los Angeles, Miss Amanda Hirschler, Mrs. Marie Voigt, Miss Elizabeth Ruth, Miss Nieta Ruth, Miss Elizabeth Brandt, Mrs. Earl Brown, Miss Edna Donner, Miss Lena Reimer, Miss Marian Shelby, Miss Minnie Schmidt, Miss Bertha Schmidt, Miss Anna Heiser, Miss Minnie Heiser, Miss Emma Heiser and Miss Barbara Funk.

Birthday Party—

One of the jolliest birthday parties ever was the one given by Mrs. Chad K. Francisco on Saturday evening in honor of the birthday anniversary of her niece, Miss Esther Bryden of Venice, who with her mother is spending some time at the Francisco home. A wienie roast was the center of attraction for the young folks, following which all the good things that go to make up a proper party were served. Those who enjoyed Miss Esther's party were Ruth Cline, Mildred Bower, Geraldine Norton, Elizabeth Reynolds, Fae Francisco, Gilbert and Ernest Cline, William and Robert Manker.

Outdoor Social—

The young people of the Methodist Church spent a jolly evening at the park Monday. Games filled the evening and away late ice cream and cake and other eats were served.

Wienie Roast—

The members of the Bible Study class which Mrs. E. H. Gartrell formerly taught, spent a happy evening at the Park Monday. A wienie roast and other good things passed the time away rapidly. Mrs. Gartrell and son, Charles Henry, were the guests of honor. The members of the class were Miss Esther Goss, Miss Elizabeth Goss, Miss Hazel Stone, Miss Iola McCrea, Miss Maud Morrison, Miss Elma Garbutt, Miss Florence Kohler, Miss Viola Manker.

Dancing—

The "Bunch," consisting of De Witt Scott, Herbert McCulloch, Bradford Manker, Clair Kirk and Ralph Ware, are giving a dance at the Rink on Friday night of this week. A jolly time is planned by the boys for their guests.

"Merry Wives"—

The Merry Wives Embroidery Club will be given a breakfast on Friday morning of this week by Mrs. Arthur H. Johnson, instead of the usual afternoon meeting. A delightful time is anticipated by the members.

Annual Picnic—

The "G. T." Club held its annual picnic at Ganesha Park last Thursday all day. Anyone who knows any of the members knows without doubt that the very best possible time was had by them, and with all the good things to eat pounded out a most successful day. A few invited guests were also present and were: Mrs. R. B. Bordwell, Mrs. N. G. Pehl, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. G. A. Brest, Mrs. S. G. Moore, Mrs. W. C. Cline. The members were the Mesdames Wm. Tuttle, Chas. Roberts, Bert Spicer, R. R. Wisely, J. L. Short, Earl Maurer, H. O. Blohm, N. L. Hamer, Robt. Van Ness and Miss Myers.

Rebekahs Initiate—

Silver Link Rebekah Lodge, No. 254, had quite a memorable evening on Friday of last week, entertaining a former president of Rebekah Assembly of Minnesota, Mrs. H. C. Hotelling. Mrs. Hotelling is also a member of a Silver Link Rebekah lodge after which the Upland lodge was named, the name having been suggested by Mrs. G. R. Crane, formerly a member of the lodge in Mapleton, Minn. Initiation of two new members was followed by a lap lunch of ice cream and cake. Several members of May Queen of Ontario were present, assisting in the work.

Piano Recital—

Miss Monica Horsch and Miss Ruth Horsch, piano pupils of Miss Onnie Eymann, gave the following program, assisted by Mr. Ed Eymann and Miss Edna Eymann, at the home of Mrs. Anna M. Eymann on Eighth avenue Friday, July 23. There were some sixty friends and admirers of the Misses Horsch and Miss Eymann present to enjoy the following program:

Shamrock Club—
Mrs. C. D. Price entertained the Shamrock Club at her home Wednesday afternoon on Palm Drive, the time speeding all too quickly with various forms of fancy work. A two-course luncheon was served by the hostess late in the afternoon. The guests for the afternoon of the club were Mrs. McNeal and Mrs. Robert Fromm. Plans were completed for a lawn social to be held on Wednesday, Aug. 11, at the home of Mrs. W. H. Andrews. The members of the club at the home of Mrs. Price yesterday were Mesdames Cunningham, Toerpe, Davis, Erickson, Eckerman, Hall, Smith, Wieland, Mrs. Chilson, Mrs. Price.

HOW ADVERTISING PAID

A remarkable proof of the power of advertising is found in the record of the filing of the account of the executors of the will of the late William Ziegler of New York.

The total estate is shown to be worth $16,500,000, which is practically all the product of the manufacture of baking powder.

For years Ziegler spent thousands of dollars every year in newspaper advertising. In every city in the land the advertisements of his baking powder appeared.

If business was poor, the ads were large. If business was good they might shrink a little, but there were just as many of them.

Competitors came and went, but Ziegler and his powder went on with their old policy. True, their product was good, and they kept it always at a high standard.

But always they had their name before the public. It became a household word for baking powder and displaced nearly all other brands. And the secret of success was publicity, persistent and long-continued publicity.

There was little attempt to produce new-fashioned advertisements. The name was enough. It was the aim of the advertising men to keep that name before the people of this and other countries, and they did so by means of the newspapers which go into every home in the land.

As a result there is not a man, woman or child over the age of ten in the country that does not know the name and fame of the powder.

This man proved that advertising pays. His sixteen million dollar estate is eloquent testimony of the success of his publicity.—Sacramento Union.

Papa—See here, Willie, you must not bother me. When I was a little boy I didn't bother my papa with questions.

Willie—Maybe if you had you could answer mine.

Whom the gods would destroy they first induce to marry foolishly.

And man is also the architect of most of his own misfortunes.

Tell your troubles to your friends if you would know how weak their sympathy really is.

Sour-faced piety seldom lands many converts.

ROADS CLOSED WHILE WORK PROGRESSES

Notice was issued by the County Highway Commission Monday that a number of roads have been closed to the public while the construction of those portions of the good roads system are under way. At the points where all roads have been closed suitable signs have been placed notifying the public of the best temporary route to take.

The lists of roads includes the following:

Colton avenue from Loma Linda to Colton.

Loma Linda avenue from Redlands Junction to Loma Linda.

Yucaipa road on the Yucaipa bench.

Base line from Highland to San Bernardino.

Colton avenue from Colton to Bloomington.

Colton avenue from Colton to Riverside.

Riverside avenue from Rialto to Colton.

San Bernardino avenue through Rialto.

Highland avenue from San Bernardino to Rialto.

Archibald avenue in Cucamonga.

Euclid avenue from Silo avenue south.

Nineteenth street (Highland avenue) Upland to Alta Loma.

ONTARIO WILL HAVE 13 VOTING PRECINCTS

To facilitate elections caused by the steady growth of the city, officials of the city of Ontario Tuesday petitioned the Board of Supervisors for authority to redistrict the voting precincts of the city, making 13 districts instead of nine as at present.

Supervisor Riley introduced a resolution granting the request of the City Council of Ontario, and the resolution received unanimous vote on first reading.

The petition recites that former Ontario Precinct No. 4 is not now within the city limits, and asks that it be called the Monte Vista precinct. The redistricting makes it so that the city and county precinct boundaries are the same.

CHECKERBOARD OF WAR MAN ON EUROPE'S BATTLEFIELDS

Harry C. Carr, author of the popular and extensively read "Checkerboard of the War" articles in the Los Angeles Times, who is now in Europe studying the war situation and obtaining first-hand information relative to the great conflict, will shortly commence the publication in the Times of a series of accurate, impartial and graphic descriptions of the gigantic struggle.

Mr. Carr is widely known as a brilliant, versatile writer, and a close student of military affairs, and his articles written from various European cities undoubtedly will be a valuable contribution to the literature of the war.

It is not Mr. Carr's intention to visit the trenches of the contending armies, but his articles, which will be a striking feature of the Sunday issues of the Times for several weeks to come, will deal with every aspect of the war.

The military, naval, political and commercial angles of Europe's saturnalia of violence, as well as its grim humor, will all be depicted in Mr. Carr's inimitable style.

The tour of Europe that will be made by Mr. Carr, as a representative of the Los Angeles Times, is another proof of that great newspaper's enterprise and of its determination to keep its readers fully informed of all the momentous happenings in the world.

EXIT BLUE BOOK

It is announced that this year's "Blue Book" will be issued in only a limited edition, and that it will probably have no successor. It is just as well. The book was originally useful and might have remained so if there had been anybody to edit it. But successive hot-air secretaries of state have gradually expanded it until it became an omnium gathering of state boost, and finally it reached the ultimate reductio ad absurdum, when Frank Jordan prostituted most of its space to fourth-hand inflated statistics and to a demonstration that each separate county in California is the greatest and most wonderful of all. It had become a campaign document of cheap flattery, for the re-election of secretaries of state. Already three years ago the state printer was compelled to print a state roster, containing all the legitimate and useful information in the Blue Book, while the secretary of state was wasting months in compiling the useful part—and giving it out in installments to the press associations every Monday morning as a personal advertisement for himself. The more the book degenerated, the more it cost and the less it was worth. Now it is well to stop it and begin all over again with somebody of intelligence, perhaps the State printer, as editor.

—Fresno Republican.

One of the leading magazine editors of the country, replying to Mr. Bryan, is reported to have said that his intimate knowledge of editors in Europe and the United States justifies him, the editor, in saying that he never has known "a single instance of the influence of a newspaper or magazine being bought." More credible and much truer is the statement that "the influence of a paper cannot be purchased. It is destroyed by the very act of purchase for a sinister purpose."

It is easier to coax some girls to sing than it is to induce them to stop.

The Exploits of Elaine

A Detective Novel and a Motion Picture Drama

By ARTHUR B. REEVE

The Well-Known Novelist and the Creator of the "Craig Kennedy" Stories

Presented in Collaboration With the Pathe Players and the Eclectic Film Company

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company All Foreign Rights Reserved

SYNOPSIS.

The New York police are mystified by a series of murders and other crimes. The principal clue to the criminal is the warning letter which is sent to the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The late victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, employs Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend, Jameson, a newspaper man. After many fruitless attempts to put Elaine and Craig Kennedy out of the way, the Clutching Hand is at last found to be none other than Perry Bennett, Elaine's lawyer and the man she is engaged to marry. Bennett flees to the den of one of his Chinamen friends, the Chinaman forces from Bennett the secret of the whereabouts of the Clutching Hand. The Chinaman forces from Bennett the secret of the whereabouts of the Clutching Hand. The Chinaman forces from Bennett the secret of the whereabouts of the Clutching Hand.

TWENTY-FIFTH EPISODE

THE LOST TORPEDO.

From the rocks of a promontory that jutted out not far from the wharf where Wu Fang's body was found and Kennedy had disappeared, opened up a beautiful panorama of a bay on one side and the sound on the other.

It was a deserted bit of coast. But anyone who had been standing near the promontory the next day might have seen a thin line, as if the water, sparkling in the sunlight, had been cut with a huge knife. Gradually a thin steel rod seemed to rise from the water itself, still moving ahead, though slowly now, as it pushed its way above the surface. After it came a round cylinder of steel, studded with bolts. It was the hatch of a submarine, and the rod was the periscope.

As the submarine lay there at rest, the waves almost breaking over it, the hatch slowly opened and a hand appeared groping for a hold. Then appeared a face with a tangle of curly black hair and keen, forceful eyes. After it the body of a man rose out of the hatch, a tall, slender, striking person. He reached down into the hold of the boat and drew forth a life preserver.

"All right," he called down in an accent slightly foreign, as he buckled on the belt. "I shall communicate with you as soon as I have something to report."

Then he deliberately plunged overboard and struck out for the shore. Hand over hand, he churned his way through the water toward the beach until at last his feet touched bottom, and he waded out, shaking the water from himself like a huge animal.

The coming of the stranger had not been entirely unheralded. Along the shore road by which Kennedy and I had followed the crooks who we thought had the torpedo, on that last chase, was waiting now a powerful limousine with its motor purring. A chauffeur was sitting at the wheel and inside, at the door, sat a man peering out along the road to the beach. Suddenly the man in the machine signaled to the driver.

"He comes!" he cried eagerly. "Drive down the road, closer, and meet him." As the swimmer strode shivering up the roadway the car approached him. The assistant swung open the door and ran forward with a thick warm coat and hat.

Neither the master nor the servant spoke as they met, but the man wrapped the coat about him, hurried into the car, the driver turned and quickly they sped toward the city.

Secretly though the entrance of the stranger had been planned, however, it was not unobserved.

Along the beach, on a boulder, gazing thoughtfully out to sea and smoking an old briar pipe, sat a bent fisherman clad in an oilskin hat and heavy, ungainly boots. About his neck was a long woolen muffler which concealed the lower part of his face quite as effectively as his scraggly, grizzled whiskers.

Suddenly he seemed to discover something that interested him, slowly rose, then turned and almost ran up the shore. Quickly he dropped behind a large rock and waited, peering out.

As the limousine bearing the stranger, on whom the fisherman had kept his eyes riveted, turned and drove away, the old salt rose from behind his rock, gazed after the car as if to fix every line of it in his memory, and then he, too, quickly disappeared up the road.

The stranger's car had scarcely disappeared when the fisherman turned from the shore road into a clump of stunted trees and made his way to a hut. Not far away stood a small, unpretentious closed car, also with a driver.

"I shall be ready in a minute," the fisherman nodded, almost running into the hut, as the driver moved his car up closer to the door.

The larger motor had disappeared far down the bend of the road when the fisherman reappeared. In an almost incredible time he had changed his oilskins and muffler for a dark coat and silk hat. He was no longer a fisherman, but a rather fussy looking old gentleman, bewiskered still, with eyes looking out keenly from a pair of gold-rimmed glasses.

"Follow that car—at any cost," he ordered simply as he let himself into the little motor, and the driver shot ahead down a bit of side road and out into the main shore road again, urging the car forward to overtake the one ahead.

Such was the entrance of the stranger—Marcus Del Mar—into America. How I managed to pass the time during the first few days after the strange disappearance of Kennedy, I don't know. It was as if I dreamt—the apartment empty, the laboratory empty, my own work on the Star uninteresting, Elaine brokenhearted, life itself a burden.

Hoping against hope, the next day I decided to drop around at the Dodge house. As I entered the library unannounced I saw that Elaine, with a faith for which I envied her, was sitting at a table, her back toward the door. She was gazing sadly at a photograph. Though I could not see it, I needed not to be told whose it was. She did not hear me come in, so engrossed was she in her thoughts. Nor did she notice me at first as I stood just behind her. Finally I put my hand on her shoulder as if I had been an elder brother.

She looked up into my face. "Have you heard from him yet?" she asked anxiously.

I could only shake my head sadly. She sighed. Involuntarily she rose and together we moved toward the garden, the last place we had seen him about the house.

We had been pacing up and down the garden, talking earnestly, only a short time when a man made his way in from the Fifth avenue gate. "Is this Miss Dodge?" he asked.

Neither Elaine nor I knew him at the time, though I think she thought he might be the bearer of some message from Craig. As a matter of fact, he was the emissary to whom the stenographer had thrown the torpedo model from the Navy building in Washington.

His visit was only a part of a deep-laid scheme. Only a few minutes before three crooks—among them our visitor—had stopped just below the house on a side street. To him the others had given final instructions and a note, and he had gone on, leaving the two standing there.

"I have a note for you," he said, bowing and handing an envelope to Elaine, which she tore open and read. Washington, D. C.

Miss Elaine Dodge, Fifth avenue, New York. My Dear Miss Dodge:—The bearer, Mr. Bailey of the Secret Service, would like to question you regarding the disappearance of Mr. Kennedy and the model of his torpedo.

Morgan Bertrand, United States Secret Service. Even as we were talking, the other two crooks had already moved up and had made their way around back of the stone wall that cut off the Dodge garden back of the house. There they stood, whispering eagerly and gazing furtively over the wall as their man talked to Elaine.

After a moment I stepped aside, while Elaine read the note, and as he asked her a few questions I could not help feeling that the affair had a very suspicious look. The more I thought of it, the less I liked it. Finally I could stand it no longer.

"I beg your pardon," I exclaimed myself to the alleged Mr. Bailey, "but may I speak to Miss Dodge alone just a minute?"

He bowed, rather ungracefully I thought, and Elaine followed me aside while I told her my fears.

"I don't like the looks of it myself," she agreed. "Yes, I'll be very careful what I say."

While we were talking I could see out of the corner of my eye that the fellow was looking at us askance and frowning. But if I had had an X-ray eye I might have seen his two companions on the other side of the wall, peering over it and done before and showing every evidence of annoyance at my interference.

The man resumed his questioning of Elaine regarding the torpedo, and she replied guardedly, as, in fact, she could not do otherwise.

Suddenly we heard shouts on the other side of the wall, as though someone were attacking someone else.

There seemed to be several of them, for a man quickly flung himself over the wall and ran to us.

"They're after us," he shouted to Bailey.

Instantly our visitor drew a gun and followed the newcomer as he ran to get out of the garden in the opposite direction.

Just then a tall, well-dressed, striking man came over the wall, accompanied by another dressed as a policeman, and rushed toward us.

The car bearing the mysterious stranger, Del Mar, kept on until it reached the shore road, then it came to the Hotel La Coste.

Del Mar jumped out of the car, his wet clothes covered completely by the long coat. He registered and rode up the elevator to rooms which had already been engaged for him. In his suite a valet was already unpacking some trunks and laying out clothes when Del Mar and his assistant entered.

With an exclamation of satisfaction at his unostentatious entry into the city, Del Mar threw off his heavy coat. The valet hastened to assist him in removing the clothes, still wet and wrinkled from his plunge into the sea.

Scarcely had Del Mar changed his clothes than he received two visitors. Strangely enough, they were dressed in the uniform of policemen.

"First of all we must convince them of our honesty," he said, looking fixedly at the two men. "Orders have been given to the men employed by Wu Fang to be about in half an hour. We must pretend to arrest them on sight. You understand?"

"Yes, sir," she nodded.

"Very well, come on," Del Mar ordered, taking up his hat and preceding them from the room.

away, uptown, until they came near the Dodge house.

Del Mar leaped from the car, followed by his two policemen. "There they are, already," he whispered, pointing up the avenue.

All three hastened up the avenue now, where, beside a wall, they could see two men looking through intently as though very angry at something going on inside.

"Arrest them!" shouted Del Mar, as his own men ran forward.

The fight was short and sharp, with every evidence of being genuine. One of the men managed to break away and jump the garden wall, with Del Mar and one of the policemen after him, while the other only reached the wall to be dragged down by the other policeman.

Elaine and I had been, as I have said, talking with the man named Bailey, who posed as a secret service man, when the rumpus began. As the man came over the fence, warning Bailey, it was evident that neither of them had time to escape. With his club the policeman struck the newcomer of the two flat, while the tall, athletic gentleman leaped upon Bailey, and before we knew it had him disarmed. In a most clean-cut and professional way he snapped the bracelets on the man.

Elaine was astonished at the astrophysical turn of affairs, too astonished even to make an outcry. As for me, it was all so sudden that I had no chance to take part in it. Besides, I should not have known quite on which side to fight. So I did nothing.

As it was over so quickly, I took a step forward to our latest arrival.

"Beg pardon, old man," I began,

Del Mar and the Old Man Drew Guns Together.

"But don't you think this is just a little raw? What's it all about?" The newest comer eyed me for a moment, then with quiet dignity drew from his pocket and handed me his card, which read simply:

M. DEL MAR, Private Investigator. As I looked up, I saw Del Mar's other policeman bringing in another man.

"These are crooks—foreign agents," replied Del Mar, pointing to the prisoners. "The government has employed me to run them down."

"What of this?" asked Elaine, holding up the note from Bertrand.

"A fake, a forgery," reiterated Del Mar, looking at it a moment critically. Then to the men uniformed as police he ordered, "You can take them to jail. They're the fellows, all right."

As the prisoners were led off, Del Mar turned to Elaine. "Would you mind answering a few questions about these men?"

"Why—no," she hesitated. "But I think we'd better go into the house, after such a thing as this. It makes me feel nervous."

With Del Mar I followed Elaine in through the conservatory.

Del Mar had scarcely registered at the La Coste when the smaller car which had been waiting at the fisherman's hut drew up before the hotel entrance. From it alighted the fussy old gentleman who bore such a remarkable resemblance to the fisherman, hastily paid his driver and entered the hotel.

He went directly to the desk and with well-manufactured firmness, scarcely reminiscent of a fisherman, began tracing the names down the list until he stopped before one which read:

"Marcus Del Mar and valet, Washington, D. C., Room 520."

With a quick glance about, he made a note of it and turned away, leaving the La Coste to take up quarters of his own in the Prince Henry down the street.

Not until Del Mar had left with his two policemen did the fussy old gentleman reappear in the La Coste. Then he rode up to Del Mar's room and rapped at the door.

"Is Mr. Del Mar in?" he inquired of the valet.

"No, sir," replied that functionary. The little old man appearing to consider, standing a moment dandling his silk hat. Absently he dropped it. As the valet stopped to pick it up the old gentleman exhibited an agility and strength scarcely to be expected of his years. He seized the valet, while with one foot he kicked the door shut.

Before the surprised servant knew what was going on, assailant had whipped from his pocket a handkerchief in which was concealed a thin tube of anesthetic. Then leaving the valet prone in a corner with the handkerchief over his face, he proceeded to make a systematic search of the rooms, opening all drawers, trunks and bags.

He turned pretty nearly everything upside down, then started on the desk. Suddenly he paused. There was a paper. He read it, then with an air of extreme elation shoved in into his pocket.

As he was going out he stopped beside the valet, removed the handkerchief from his face and bound him with a cord from the portieres. Then, still immaculate in spite of his encounter, he descended in the elevator, re-entered a waiting car and drove off.

Quite evidently, however, he wanted to cover his tracks, for he had not gone half a dozen blocks before he stopped, paid and tipped the driver generously, and disappeared into the theater crowd.

Back again in the Prince Henry, whither the fussy little old man made his way as quickly as he could through a side street, he went quietly up to his room.

His door was now locked. He did not have to deny himself to visitors, for he had none. Still his room was cluttered by a vast amount of paraphernalia and he was seated before a table deep in work.

First of all he tied a handkerchief over his nose and mouth. Then he took up a cartridge from the table and carefully extracted the bullet. Into the space occupied by the bullet he poured a white powder and added a wad of paper, like a blank cartridge, placing the cartridge in the chamber of a revolver and repeating the operation until he had it fully loaded. It was his own invention of an asphyxiating bullet.

Perhaps half an hour later the old gentleman, his room cleaned up and his immaculate appearance restored, sauntered forth from the hotel down the street like a veritable Turveydrop, to show himself.

Elaine seemed quite impressed with her new friend, Del Mar, as we made our way to the library, though I am

Some time later, Del Mar's car stopped just below the Dodge house. "You men go around back of the house and watch," ordered Del Mar. As they disappeared he turned and went up the Dodge steps.

I walked back with my strange experience with the fussy little old gentleman, feeling more than ever, now that Craig was gone, that both Elaine and Aunt Josephine needed me.

As we sat talking in the library, Rusty, released from the chain on which Jennings kept him, bounded with a rush into the library.

"Good old fellow," encouraged Elaine, patting him.

Just then Jennings entered, and a moment later was followed by Del Mar, who bowed as we welcomed him.

"Do you know," he began, "I believe that the lost torpedo model is somewhere in this house, and I have reason to anticipate another attempt of foreign agents to find it. If you'll pardon me, I've taken the liberty of surrounding the place with some men we can trust."

While Del Mar was speaking Elaine picked up a ribbon from the table and started to tie it about Rusty's neck. As Del Mar proceeded she paused, still holding the ribbon. Rusty, who hated ribbons, saw his chance and quietly sidled out, seeking refuge in the conservatory.

Alone in the conservatory, Rusty quickly forgot about the ribbon and began nosing about the palms. At last he came to the pot in which the torpedo model had been buried in the soft earth by the thief the night it had been stolen from the fountain.

Quickly Elaine recalled herself, and, seeing the ribbon in her hand and Rusty gone, called him. There was no answer, and she excused herself, for it was against the rules for Rusty to wander about.

In his haste the thief had left just a corner of the handkerchief sticking out of the dirt. What none of us had noticed, Rusty's keen eyes and nose discovered, and his instinct told him to dig for it. In a moment he uncovered the torpedo and handkerchief and sniffed.

Just then he heard his mistress calling him. Rusty had been whipped for digging in the conservatory, and now, with his tail between his legs, he seized the torpedo in his mouth and bolted for the door of the drawing room, for he had heard voices in the library. As he did so he dropped the handkerchief and the little propeller loosened by his teeth, fell off.

Elaine entered the conservatory, still calling. Rusty was not there. He had reached the stairs, scurrying up to the attic, still holding the torpedo model in his mouth. He pushed open the attic door and ran in. Rusty's last refuge in time of trouble was back of a number of trunks, among which were two of almost the same size and appearance. Behind one of them he had hidden a miscellaneous collection of bones, pieces of biscuit and things dear to his heart. He dropped the torpedo among these treasures.

Del Mar, meanwhile, had followed Elaine through the hall and into the conservatory. As he entered he could see her stooping down to look through the palms for Rusty. She straightened up and went on out.

Del Mar followed. Beside the palm pot where Rusty had found the torpedo he happened to see the old handkerchief soiled with dirt. Near by lay the little propeller. He picked them up.

"She has found it!" he exclaimed in wonder, following Elaine.

Outside, on the lawn, Del Mar's men had been looking about, but had discovered nothing. They paused a moment to speak.

"Look out!" whispered one of them. "There's someone coming."

They dropped down in the shadow. There in the light of the street lamps was the fussy old gentleman coming across the lawn. He stole up to the door of the conservatory and looked through. Del Mar's men crawled a few feet closer. The little old man entered the conservatory and looked about again stealthily. The two men followed him in noiselessly and watched as he bent over the palm pot from which the dog had dug up the torpedo. He looked at the hole curiously. Just then he heard sounds behind him and sprang to his feet.

"Hands up," ordered one of the men, covering him with a gun.

The little old man threw up his hands, raising his cane still in his right hand. The man with the gun took a step closer. As he did so the little old man brought down his cane with a quick blow and knocked the gun out of his hand. The second man seized the cane. The old man jerked the cane back and was standing there with a thin, tough steel rapier. It was a sword cane. Del Mar's man held the sheath.

As the man attacked with the sheath the little old man parried, sent it flying from his grasp and wounded him. The wounded man sank down, while the little old man ran off through the palms, followed by the other of Del Mar's men.

Around the hall he ran and back into the conservatory, where he picked up a heavy chair and threw it through the glass, dropping himself behind a convenient hiding-place near by. Del Mar's man, close after him, mistaking the crash of glass for the escape of the man he was pursuing, went on through the broken exit. Then the little old man doubled on his tracks and made for the front of the house.

With Aunt Josephine I had remained in the library.

"What's that?" I exclaimed at the first sounds. "A fight?"

Together we rushed for the conservatory.

The fight, followed so quickly by the crash of glass, also alarmed Elaine and Del Mar in the hallway and they hurried toward the library, which we had just left, by another door.

As they entered they saw a little old gentleman rushing in from the conservatory and locking the door behind him. He waited about and be-and Del Mar recognized each other at once. They drew together, but the little old man fired first.

His bullet struck the wall back of Del Mar and a cloud of vapor was instantly formed, enveloping Del Mar and even Elaine. Del Mar fell, overcame, while Elaine sank more slowly. The little old man ran forward.

In the conservatory Aunt Josephine and I heard the shooting, just as one of Del Mar's men ran in again. With him we ran back toward the library.

By this time the whole house was aroused. Jennings and Marie were hurrying downstairs, crying for help and making their way to the library also.

In the library the little old man bent over Del Mar and Elaine. But it was only a moment later that he heard the whole house aroused. Quickly he shut and locked the folding doors to the drawing room as, with Del Mar's man, I was beating at the rear library door.

"I'll go around," I suggested, hurrying off, while Del Mar's man tried to beat in the door.

Inside the little old man, who had been listening, saw that there was no means of escape. He pulled off his coat and vest and turned them inside out. On the inside he had prepared an exact copy of Jennings's library.

It was only a matter of seconds before he had completed his change. For a moment he paused and looked at the two prostrate figures before him. Then he took a rose from a vase on the table and placed it in Elaine's hand.

Finally, with his whiskers and wig off, he moved to the rear door where Del Mar's man was beating and opened it.

"Look," he cried, pointing in an agitated way at Del Mar and Elaine. "What shall we do?"

Del Mar's man, who had never seen Jennings, ran to his master, and the little old man, in his new disguise, slipped quietly into the hall and out the front door, where he had a taxicab waiting for him down the street.

A moment later I burst open the other library door and Aunt Josephine followed me in, just as Jennings himself and Marie entered from the drawing room.

It was only a moment before we had Del Mar, who was most in need of care, on the sofa, and Elaine, already regaining consciousness, lay back in a deep easy chair.

As Del Mar moved I turned again to Elaine, who was now nearly recovered. "How do you feel?" I asked, anxiously.

Her throat was parched by the asphyxiating fumes, but she smiled brightly, though weakly.

"Wh-where did I get that?" she managed to gasp finally, catching sight of the rose in her hand. "Did you put it there?"

I shook my head and she gazed at the rose, wondering.

Whoever the little man was, he was gone.

I longed for Craig.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Solitaire
"What's the man who just kicked the chair over and threw a pack of cards into the fireplace?" inquired one waiter.

"Oh," replied the other, "he's the gentleman who tried to rest his nerves by playing solitaire."
The modest friend who offers to lend you a couple of dollars when you are broke is far more worthy of your praise than the hero of a hundred battles.

GAIN IN TRADE BALANCE

An increase of nearly $293,000,000 in the export trade and a decrease of $220,000,000 in imports is shown by the analysis of the United States foreign trade for the eleven months covering the European war. The trade balance in favor of the United States is estimated at $1,060,889,505. The analysis shows an enormous increase in export of crude foodstuffs and food animals, the total exportations amounting to $481,110,384 as against $126,408,965 for the same period last year. Crude materials for use in manufacturing fell off nearly $300,000,000 in exports owing to the closing of European factories which use American raw materials.

Exports to France more than doubled; to Italy they nearly tripled, and to Great Britain they increased by nearly $300,000,000. The export trade to Germany fell from $288,155,430 to $28,861,587 and to Austria from $21,280,037 to $1,240,167. During May less than $400 worth of merchandise went to Germany.

NEW S. P. DEPOT AT LOS ANGELES

Safety, Service and Comfort were the results aimed at in building the new Southern Pacific Passenger Station at Los Angeles, and as far as architectural craft could design and mechanical genius carry out, the undertaking has been successful. The main concourse is large, light and airy with comfortable seats; at the north end is a rest room for women, handsomely furnished with chairs and couches, little chairs for the children and cribs for the babies. A matron is in attendance at all times. Also the mezzanine floor above is furnished with easy chairs, lounges and writing desks and is reserved for the exclusive use of women. At the south end is the smoking-room, and the mezzanine floor above is fitted up as a lounging room for men. The ticket office is an innovation in station architecture, in that it gets away from the closed-in room with the clerks waiting on the public through windows, and places them in a more approachable position, which the management believes will work to the better serving of the traveling public. Another improvement is the revolving ticket cases, which do away with unsightly cupboards and pigeon holes above the counter and places the tickets in a more convenient position to the hand of the ticket seller.

Opening off the main concourse at the north end is the baggage-room, and here is another improvement for the easy handling of hand baggage—in the low counter, which allows valises to be placed in position for checking without the awkward lift made necessary by the old high counter. This plan is also carried out at the parcel checking counter. At the south end of the concourse is the information and telegraph and telephone offices, and across the exit is the restaurant and lunch counter, which is under the management of the Southern Pacific commissary, and is keeping up the excellent standard set by the Southern Pacific dining-car service.

Indicators are at all entrances to trains for the information of passengers and the trains are reached by inclines and a subway which does away with the necessity of crossing any track and gives the highest percentage of safety.

Outside the station near the street is a private parking place for taxicabs and a public parking place for automobiles.

Both inside and out the building is dignified and serviceable in appearance, and is a credit to its builders and to the City of Los Angeles.

F. O. B. Corona—Sacked

A Mineral Fertilizer

containing the largest percentage of iron sulphides free from arsenic, carrying 108 pounds of commercial sulphuric acid to 100 pounds of iron sulphides, a large percentage of gypsum, scientifically mixed by nature.

Why add a few pounds of available plant food per acre, at from $30 to $60 a ton, when you have from forty to sixty thousand pounds per square foot per acre of unavailable plant food in your soil? And nothing will make it available and attack the undecomposed material but acid. We are now shipping daily to the Arlington Heights Fruit Co. and other large growers, who, upon investigation, found that we had the largest percentage of sulphur per ton to be found anywhere. This deposit is the oldest of its kind in the vicinity, and was worked years before our competitors, and is incontestable. It is operated under a long lease by a company managed by G. H. Hadley.
